Customer Reviews

This book is absolutely terrible. On top of being as overpriced as every other textbook ever, it also takes itself way too seriously. For one example, which is what this review will center on, Chapter 6 talks about four Behavioral Styles - Rational, Inquisitive, Decisive and Expressive. The chapter says that you should try to determine what type of personality a customer may have in order to better deal with them, but yet to not take it too seriously, since people may display traits from other personality types as well. The catch? Well, at least to me, it really seems like Lucas simply made all of this up. I'm serious. At first he talks about research done by the likes of Carl Jung, but Lucas never makes a good connection between that and the specific four personality types that he lists as fact. Try googling those four terms ("Rational, Inquisitive, Decisive, Expressive") and as surely as clockwork, THIS book is the only result where it will show up. Being a college student, I also have access to professional databases like EBSCO and Academic OneFile, and I looked there too - nothing. Nothing at all. I cannot find those behavioral styles he was writing about anywhere. No Google result, no publication, nothing. The closest things I was able to find were a few random business articles with terms similar (but not exactly the same) to the book, but certainly nothing credible. I simply cannot find where Lucas got his information for his Behavioral Styles that he's passing off as fact. I mean, especially since he basically states that you can't take them too seriously anyway, since people apparently display attributes from all four - using Occam's Razor, wouldn't it be easier to just assume that these behavioral styles simply don't exist at all?
